Promoting Canada–China Relations and Canadian Values

A. Meeting with Vice-chair of the National Peoples Congress and Politburo Member, Mr. WANG Chen

The co-chairs renewed their acquaintance with Mr. WANG Chen at the NPC Great Hall of the People in Tiananmen Square. Vice-chair WANG recently visited Ottawa in spring of 2018 where he met with the entire CCLA Executive.

In Beijing, all parties committed to sustaining the momentum established by the leaders of the two countries through recent high-level visits to strengthen ties further. They noted that interparliamentary links play a particularly valuable role in deepening relations and highlighted that meetings such as those between CCLA members need to be undertaken more frequently and consistently.

The parties discussed recent developments related to Canada-China free trade talks. Mr. WANG referenced the recent telephone call between Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland and her Chinese counterpart Minister WANG Yi. They also discussed specific industrial sectors such as agriculture, energy and transportation.

He noted that Dr. Bethune is a source of inspiration for deepening modern day cooperation between Canada and China.

The Vice-chair took the opportunity to highlight the work that his association does with different levels of government including Canadian provincial and municipal governments as well as universities. The co-chairs gained important insights into the role the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries can play in furthering trade and cultural ties between Canada and China at sub-national levels. The co-chairs also took the opportunity to explain the role of parliamentary diplomacy and how the ties between Canadian parliamentarians and Chinese National People's Congress members can promote understanding, cooperation and trade between the two nations.

C. Chinese People's Institute for Foreign Affairs

Vice-president ZHAO Weiping warmly hosted the Canadian delegation for a working dinner at the Chinese People's Institute for Foreign Affairs (CPIFA) compound adjacent to the Forbidden City. This meeting was a follow up to CPIFA President WU Hailong and Vice-president ZHAO's visit to Canada in September 2018. In September, the CPIFA leadership attended a University of Alberta-China Institute Conference in Banff and then travelled to Ottawa where they met informally with the CCLA co-chairs. The meeting in Beijing with the co-chairs focussed on cementing the relationship and areas for future collaboration especially in areas of trade, investment and regional cooperation.

D. Visits to the White Cloud Taoist Temple and the Dongsì Mosque

The co-chairs also took the opportunity to visit two faith communities while in Beijing. A guided tour of the White Cloud Taoist Temple was provided by the temple master in conjunction with the Chinese Taoist Association. Canada–China Cooperation in Health Sector

The Wellness Institute

As China develops economically, there is increasing incidence of chronic health conditions such as diabetes and heart disease. Moreover, China like Canada is also faced with both the challenges and opportunities of an aging population. These dynamics are laying the foundation for a new area of cooperation between Canada and China to promote and support wellness and healthy lifestyles.

The Canada Wellness Institute located in the Seven Oakes Health Centre in Winnipeg is a world renown healthcare provider that supports healthy lifestyles as a model for chronic disease management and prevention. More recently the Canada Wellness

Institute has become an international brand and is an active partner in a joint venture company in China to develop facilities and online services for wellness promotion and chronic disease management.

Senator Day toured the Wellness Institute in Beijing to learn more about how it was partnering with various Chinese hospitals. The Senator was also able to learn about different digital health technologies that the Institute was developing. Representatives from the Wellness Institute underscored the opportunities for Canadian community-based health-care providers to work with Chinese counter parts to promote digital health technologies and wellness interventions.

Canada–China Cooperation in Winter Sport

Meeting with 2022 Olympic and Paralympic Organizing Committee

The co-chairs met with key officials from the Winter Olympic and Paralympic Organizing Committee to discuss potential for deepening China-Canada cooperation in the sport and tourism sector, particularly as Beijing will host the Winter Olympic and Paralympic Games in 2022.

The co-chairs toured one of the three sites being developed for the 2022 games. The organizers are committed to hosting a game that is inclusive and sustainable. To this end the site the co-chairs visited is the renovation and refurbishment of a decommissioned Shougang steel factory. The factory, once one of the largest in China, was closed in the early 2000s. The outdated technology produced high levels of pollution and made it unsafe to continue operations. The main buildings of the mill are in the process of being repurposed. They will serve as office space for the event organizers, training facilities for athletes as well as venues for the events themselves.

The co-chairs were given a presentation outlining the plan for the 2022 Games which, like the Vancouver games in 2010, will take place in three different sites in and around Beijing. The co-chairs also toured training facilities and were able to meet with the Chinese National Curling Team. The officials explained their ambition to develop the sport and tourism industry further to embrace more foreign visitors but also to encourage more Chinese to actively participate in winter sports.

The co-chairs and Organizing Committee officials all underscored the role that sport plays in strengthening mutual understanding as well as being a key driver of relations across a range of sectors, including trade. The officials also noted the importance placed by the Chinese in this event because of its opportunity to promote active living and wellness. This is an important policy priority as China transitions from an export lead developing economy to a consumer driven middle-class economy.

Canada–China Commercial Cooperation

Canada–China Business Council

The co-chairs met with Travis Joern, Managing Director of the Canada–China Business Council (CCBC). They discussed the commercial ambitions set out by the leadership of Canada and China in recent high-level meetings and their potential impact on stronger ties. The co-chairs were encouraged by the potential for deeper cooperation in terms of knowledge transfer of management and medical skills, pharmaceuticals, senior care, nutrition and health, and agriculture technology. They also noted the importance of a favourable business, legal and regulatory climate to attract foreign investors and other potential commercial partners, including visa facilitation and establishing representative offices.

Mr. Joern highlighted the cooperation between the CCBC and Global Affairs Canada (GAC) and its Trade Commissioners Service. The CCBC works closely with GAC in its Chinese regional offices. The CCBC provides support and expertise to Canadian businesses who are already investing and selling to China but also to enterprises who are interested in exploring business opportunities with China.

Mr. Joern highlighted the importance of people to people ties and relationship building as the key to doing business in China. He said, “it is necessary for Canadian companies interested in the Chinese market to not only come to China – but to come often.”

Canada–China Cooperation in Education
